- Women played a crucial role in providing cohesiveness to the nationalist movement due to the universal category of "woman" that transcended divisions.
- Nationalists used the concept of "Bharat Mata" to evoke nationalist sentiments and delegitimise British rule, which also legitimised women's involvement in the public sphere.
- Women's support was essential for effective forms of resistance, such as boycotting foreign-made cloth and picketing shops.
- The female intelligentsia took leadership roles and facilitated the participation of women from the extended female space, creating an intermediate social space between the household and the public world.
- Women's participation in the freedom struggle empowered them and brought them out of domestic confinement into public life, professions, and governance roles. It strengthened the national movement and opened doors for gender equality.
